

October, 12

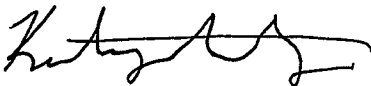

Dear Parole Granter:

My dad should be granted parole, he has a positive impact on my family, and our community. He's always the first person to volunteer and help out a friend, a neighbour, or stranger in need. He has never been violent in any way, and he has always met his bail conditions without a problem. I see no reason to keep him in these conditions. He deserves to come home and be with his family, specially after all the headache and extreme conditions he has had to deal with these past 7 years to stand up for citizens across Canada against an unjust law, openly and freely. Yet he is being punished. I really miss my daddy, I really want my father home for Christmas and my mom needs her husband back.

He is a good person an upstanding citizen that has only ever been a great value to whatever association, or job he has dealt with and no one will ever say otherwise. In school I'm taught that only bad people go to jail. My dad is not a bad person and has only proven to do good.

Please take this time to really look at what he has done and ask yourself if a man risking all he owns standing up for what the law abiding citizens across Canada supported, deserves this. I never thought I'd have to ask for my dad for Christmas but here it is, 'I need him, I love him more than anything and I couldn't image going through all my life's rough dealings without his encouragement, and loving guidance, with still so much more to face I need my daddy'.

Sincerely;

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'Katey Montague', with a stylized, cursive script.

Katey Montague